Chapter 459: The Abyss of Eternal Punishment

The Creation of the Infernal Abyss

Sung Jin-Woo stood on the dark edge of the Netherworld, his golden eyes gleaming with divine determination. The cold, silent, and desolate prison realm stretched endlessly below him. But now, he envisioned something far more severe—an abyss where justice would burn as fiercely as flames themselves.

"There must be a place for those whose sins are beyond redemption," Sung Jin-Woo declared solemnly. "A punishment fitting for those who have committed unforgivable deeds."

With a wave of his hand, infused with the essence of his boundless power, he forged a new domain within the Netherworld—a realm of eternal fire and torment.

A Realm of Fire and Agony

The newly formed part of the Netherworld was a stark contrast to its icy wastelands:

Rivers of boiling magma flowed endlessly, their heat scorching even the indestructible ground beneath them.

The sky was shrouded in eternal darkness, illuminated only by bursts of black flames that flickered like the souls trapped within.

Jagged rocks coated in ash and ember protruded from the scorched earth.

"This shall be the Abyss of Eternal Punishment," Sung Jin-Woo announced. "A prison for those whose sins defy forgiveness."

The Torment of the Damned

In this infernal abyss, the punishment was merciless and absolute:

The guilty were forced to drink boiling magma, which seared through their ethereal forms.

They were compelled to consume burning stones, their throats and insides forever scorched by the searing heat.

Every time their forms were nearly destroyed by the relentless torment, they were revived instantly, only for the agony to begin anew.

This cycle of suffering had no end unless Sung Jin-Woo himself decreed that the punishment was complete.

"For those who betrayed trust, destroyed countless innocent lives, or reveled in evil without remorse," Sung Jin-Woo declared, "your suffering shall be endless until justice is fully served."

The Guardians of the Abyss

To oversee this domain of torment, Sung Jin-Woo appointed the dark archangel Amenadiel and his fiercest dark angels.

"Maintain order here," Sung Jin-Woo commanded Amenadiel. "Ensure that the punishment is just and eternal for those who deserve it."

Amenadiel, his six black wings shimmering with shadows, knelt before Sung Jin-Woo. "By your will, my lord. None shall escape justice."

The dark angels took their positions, their fiery eyes vigilant as they ensured that no soul could flee from the flames.

A Divine Warning

As word of the Abyss of Eternal Punishment spread across the multiverse, a sense of fear gripped those who had considered committing grievous sins.

Priests, saints, and followers of the Divine Triad issued warnings:

"Do good, seek righteousness, and your soul shall find peace in Elysium. But betray your soul with unforgivable deeds, and you shall find yourself cast into the abyss, drinking magma and consuming burning stones for eternity."

This stern message resonated throughout countless realms, serving as a deterrent to those who walked the path of evil.

A Realm Balanced by Justice

Sung Jin-Woo stood at the edge of the abyss, satisfied with his creation.

"The multiverse must remain in balance," he said to himself. "There can be no paradise without justice. And justice shall burn as fiercely as these flames."

With that, he turned and ascended back to the Godverse, leaving the Abyss of Eternal Punishment to serve as a grim reminder of the consequences of sin in a cosmos governed by divine will.
